

The Italians are Coming!

WITH 400 YACHT BUILDS UNDER its belt thus far, the Italian Sea Group has currently expanded its operations with a new refit facility boasting 100,000 sq meters of production space and 250 meter LOA capacity in Marina di Carrara Italy. The Italian Sea Group's brand components are very well known: Admiral, Tecnomar and Nouvi Canteieri Apuania make up over 60 years of European tradition. Making its presence established in North America is one of the group's immediate goals, and with its new delivery of the Impero 37, making waves across news wires (and eventually the Atlantic), the company isn't too far from total accomplishment.

The Impero could be built as a full displacement with up to 4-decks within the 60m configuration.

At their new refit facility, captain and crews will find 2,000sqm of space in which to relax or get some personal work done. The yard has a 200m dry dock, a floating barge for yachts up to 90m and a number of cranes capable of lifting over 1,000 tons.

To say that the facility can handle almost anything is an understatement. Custom builds that have emerged from the yard thus far are completely different from one another. In addition to the Impero 70, there is a 40m of the same line being delivered to her owner this summer. The yard is also completing work on a 24m sailing yacht and three other custom yachts in the spring of next year.
